

10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC: While DC has released many excellent animated movies, there have also been a lot of subpar or terrible entries over the years, particularly in recent years. Some of the worst aspects of the DCEU seem to carry over to animated movies, from petulant characters to a lack of detail. Even if not all of them are fundamentally flawed or unwatchable trash fires, several of them can nonetheless be quite difficult. Here is a list of the 10 worst animated movies that DC has produced over the years.

10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC

1. Superman: Red Son
2. Batman vs. Robin
3. "Batman Unlimited" Films
4. Superman: Brainiac Attacks
5. Teen Titans: The Judas Contract
6. Batman: Bad Blood
7. Batman: Hush
8. Son of Batman
9. Batman and Harley Quinn
10. Batman: The Killing Joke

Superman: Red Son

*10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC - Superman: Red Son

Upon its debut, the comic book “Superman: Red Son” became an immediate success and won an Eisner award in 2004 for its outstanding excellence. In this world, instead of Kansas, Superman’s baby spacecraft landed in Ukraine, where he was reared as a Soviet asset. The themes and plot of the movie are intricate, however, the movie adaptation sadly left out a significant portion of the narrative. When the movie is intended to be from a Russian perspective, the very intricate message is replaced with forced new ones, and the movie is also overtly nationalistic and pro-American, which itself is distracting.

Batman vs. Robin

Batman vs. Robin

The existing DC Animated Movie Universe has Damien Wayne as a blot. Damien becoming a significant part of the canon is difficult given that Batman is already present in 4 of every 5 movies, which is already taxing. Due to the fact that Damien is the child of Talia al Ghul and Bruce Wayne, he naturally inherited many amazing skills from both of his parents in terms of intellect, strength, and spirit. He has a lot of redeemable characteristics, but he's also very pompous and unlikeable. The main character is unlikable and dull, the plot is formulaic, and the adversarial force is underutilized, therefore the movie lacks excitement.

“Batman Unlimited” Films

10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC - "Batman Unlimited" Films

There is nothing quite as enjoyable as viewing a movie that is nothing more than an advertisement. The movies from Batman Unlimited are exactly that. There is nothing wrong with occasionally putting DC in a lighter vein, but seeing Batman battle in enormous mech suits or ride laser-firing dinosaurs seems a bit out of character, mostly because it's obviously a toy commercial. These are feature-length commercials that linger too long; it would be OK if they were 5-minute clips.

Superman: Brainiac Attacks

Superman: Brainiac Attacks

The movie Brainiac Attacks is odd. Its animation is similar to that of the DC Animated Universe, but none of the normal writers are involved. Additionally, Lex Luthor's voice actor is no longer Clancy Brown, and the character no longer comes off as serious or menacing but rather as a Gene Hackman-like Luthor performed for laughs. The tone of the movie is inconsistent, and the bizarre production aspects pulled from Superman: The Animated Series without any dedication or consistency to the series just add to the confusion.

Teen Titans: The Judas Contract

*10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC - Teen Titans: The Judas Contract

A timeless Teen Titans story arc, “The Judas Contract,” continues to be popular with comic book readers today. The major character, Terra, emerges and then vanishes inside the same film, therefore the movie falls short of the comic book in terms of delivering a stale and watered-down adaptation. The Teen Titans cartoon, which told the same plot in a few quick episodes with considerably more profound depth, dwarfs it when compared to both the comic and the show.

Batman: Bad Blood

Batman: Bad Blood

The Bat family, including Damian, who will always be unlovable, must fight evil in Gotham City after Batman seems to be killed in action. In that there are multiple versions of the Caped Crusader onscreen at once, Bad Blood is comparable to Into The Spider-verse, but it lacks the film's sophistication, nuance, and exquisite animation. Like the previous forgettable DC Animated Movie Universe movies, this one is watchable only once and lacks the content to be watched again. It does nothing to set itself apart from the countless other Batman animated movies and is completely forgettable and uninteresting.

Batman: Hush

*10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC - Batman: Hush

One of the best Batman storylines ever written is the comic book arc “Batman: Hush.” The story is among the finest Catwoman/Batman stories ever, features a unique and exciting adversary, has a terrific story, and has stunning art. What was the outcome of the film adaptation? Perfectly acceptable and in keeping with all of the recent DC animated movies is the animation style. The story’s Catwoman/Batman component still holds together largely. This is horrible, but it turns much worse. Several side stories and people suffer and are cut. But the movie’s villain was completely butchered. The Riddler was shown to be the person behind the bandages, not Hush, a.k.a. Thomas Elliot, who was the villain of the movie.

Son of Batman

Son of Batman

There are many recent Damian Wayne films on this list, but none of them manage to represent him in such a grating way as Son of Batman does. In this movie, a lot of things are going wrong. Damian Wayne resembles every would-be “cool kid” from the 1990s, in my opinion. He actually reminds me of Jason Todd from the comics, who was killed off in “Death in the Family” by fan vote because of his continual complaining and urge to be rebellious. Damian Wayne simply lacks the charm or stylish “Red Hood” comeback necessary to make up for his shortcomings. He is merely a brat. And things get worse when that brat repeatedly outwits and outsmarts Deathstroke, among the DC’s toughest and brightest villains. Maybe he’ll adopt the title of “Brat-Man” in a few years.

Batman and Harley Quinn

*10 Worst Animated Movies made by DC - Batman and Harley Quinn

Bruce Timm played a crucial role in the DC Animated Universe, but lately, it seems like all he's done for movies is set up romantic relationships between famous characters. Nightwing and Harley make whoopee in this movie, which is a really overdone and pointless scene. Similar to Brainiac Attacks, Harley Quinn and Batman is a hot mess; it retains the classic DCAU animation style and some of the voices while changing others. In addition, the movie's tone is just a loose narrative full of cheap jokes and shock humor that is less "mature" and more childish. What should have been a humorous movie becomes cheap.

Batman: The Killing Joke

Batman: The Killing Joke

In the comic adaptation of “The Killing Joke”, everyone agreed that the prologue starring Batgirl was overlong, pointless, and uncomfortable. And to say that it “stained” it would be an understatement. It is completely wrong, so out of style for both Batgirl and Batman, and it accomplishes nothing. Yes, the criminal plot itself is tedious. The adaptation of “The Killing Joke” then started, but it wasn’t very impressive, particularly after having to follow up the 20-minute pre-padded scene. It failed to live up to the hype, the plot progressed quickly, and the animation was a little stale. Yes, the voice performers for Batman and the Joker were superb. But at this point, both Conroy and Hamill have put in countless hours of acting, so applauding their work in each film is to be expected.

Also Read: 10 Most Evil Versions of Superman