The Origin of a Dark Intention

Why Lord Voldemort Wanted To Kill Harry Potter? - The Origin of a Dark Intention

The Prophecy: The root of Voldemort's desire to kill Harry lies in a prophecy. This prophecy, made by Professor Sybill Trelawney, foretold the birth of a child at the end of July, who had the potential to defeat Voldemort. The prophecy specified that this child would be a boy, born to parents who had thrice defied Voldemort, and would possess a power unknown to the Dark Lord.

The Eavesdropper's Tale: Severus Snape, then a Death Eater, partly overheard this prophecy and reported it to Voldemort. Snape's incomplete knowledge played a crucial role in Voldemort's decision. At this time, there were two children who fit this description: Harry Potter and Neville Longbottom.

Voldemort's Choice: Harry Over Neville

A Decision Driven by Similarities: Voldemort, ironically, saw himself in Harry. Both were half-bloods, and perhaps, in some dark, twisted way, Voldemort perceived Harry as a reflection of his own younger self. This perceived similarity led Voldemort to target Harry, believing he was the child mentioned in the prophecy.

The Fateful Night at Godric's Hollow: On that fateful night, Voldemort killed Harry's parents but failed to kill Harry. Lily Potter's ultimate sacrifice, her love for Harry, created a protective charm so powerful that Voldemort's killing curse rebounded upon himself, leaving Harry with his iconic lightning-shaped scar.

The Scar: A Symbol and Connection

Harry's lightning-shaped scar was more than just a mark from Voldemort's attack. Without realizing it, Voldemort made Harry a Horcrux, putting a piece of his own soul into Harry.

This created a strong, unbreakable link between them.

Because of this connection, Harry could speak Parseltongue, the snake language, and sometimes he could even see what Voldemort was thinking. This scar was a constant reminder of the deep bond Harry unknowingly shared with Voldemort, playing a key role in their intertwined destinies and the battles that followed in the magical world of Harry Potter.

Neville Longbottom: The Other Side of the Prophecy

Neville Longbottom plays a crucial 'what-if' role in the Harry Potter saga. Like Harry, Neville fit the prophecy's criteria and could have been Voldemort's nemesis.

In an impressive display of courage, Neville destroyed one of the final Horcruxes, playing a pivotal role in the Dark Lord's downfall. His actions underscore the importance of bravery and the significant impact of every character in the overarching battle against evil.

Conclusion: The Power of Choice and Love

In conclusion, Voldemort's reason for wanting to kill Harry Potter was rooted in fear - fear of a prophecy, fear of death, and perhaps, fear of his own reflection in Harry. The irony of the Dark Lord's downfall is that it was his own actions that led to his demise.

The story of Harry Potter is not just a tale of magic and adventure, but also a narrative about the power of choice, love, and destiny. It's a reminder that sometimes, the greatest power lies not in spells and curses, but in the simple, yet profound act of self-sacrifice and love.
